I've tried http POST /nofrag and http POST /nofrag if I try to specify processing, it behaves in a somewhat weird way: http POST #or http POST #or http PUT #or http PUT A: The behavior you describe is not a problem, as usual for httpie, it's the expected behavior. You can have the shell run in the background or put it in a docker container and invoke it as a background process. You can also do this in your.bashrc: export http_server="http -f -t -h -s 127.0.0.1 -p 8080" export http_server_path="/.http-server" echo 'export http_server="$http_server"' >> ~/.bashrc echo 'export http_server_path="$http_server_path"'>> ~/.bashrc source ~/.bashrc You'll notice that the command has been divided into two steps. You can define the behavior you like through 0cc13bf012
